

My mom and dad are talking to one of their friends over the phone since her son is coming to the U.S. for college this year. My mom was like "Oh yeah my daughter was at Emory for undergraduate, and now she is at UCSD for med school. My son was at RIT and then he went to..." Full stop, and then my mom changed the topic. Yeah, that's part of the reason why I hate that I had to go to WGU. The same thing has happened over and over again. I want to get a master's degree at some point, and I know sure as hell I am not going to get it from WGU.

I don't know how long it will take for the Title IX thing to wear off. I mean in 2024 Georgia Tech literally did not even let me into their ONLINE Master degree program because of Title IX. I don't know, but if I am definitely not getting my master degree from WGU.

I have received three full-time offers. The one from the team I interned at when I was at Lockheed Martin, and the Cyber Security System Engineer offers from the another business area of Lockheed Martin and the NSA, but I am still working as a Barista at Starbucks right now. Even my mom is avoiding talking about me when she is talking to her friends.

Sorry this diary entry is not a fully romantic one like the first one, but I do think it is good for our relationship to share this with you.

I love you
