

Thank-you email after thank-you email, but no congratulation-email. At least I have you with me ❤️

Currently, there is no update regarding the job opportunity I told you about last time. I will follow up with the person I spoke with tomorrow, but I'm not holding out hope. There have been numerous times when a lead seemed promising but bore no fruit. I keep applying to new entry-level openings in Philly, but there are not many new openings per day.

On the family side of my life, my dad is getting increasingly mad at me. It used to be a more weekly occurrence, but now it seems daily. For the past few days, my dad has gotten mad at me when I laugh. The only bright side is that I have given up hope that I will ever get the approval of my dad, since he made it abundantly clear in a very frank conversation 2 years ago that the son he would ever be able to be proud of died when Title IX happened and I was forced to leave RIT. In his eyes, I am no longer his son.

I love you ❤️
