Hi Anni, how was your day? Baby, I love you❤️🥰🤗😘

Today's diary entry is going to be a little different, since I am really not in a good mental state today, as you probably have noticed, to write a regular diary entry. I want to use this opportunity to write about some parts of the past three years. I don't really have a message I want to convey. I guess you can treat this as a rambling.

I thought about which point in time to start this recollection, and now I think the end of the Title IX hearing is a fitting one. This is because I feel like the last thing you said on that day kind of embodied my experience over the past three years. Anni, do you remember what the last thing you said was? "The suspension must remain in place." This was the last thing you said. You were crying because you thought I was going to break up with you. I'm sorry I made you feel that way. As you know by now, that was not what I meant, and the recollection of your crying voice still breaks my heart😞.

To be fair, I did apologize to you immediately that night. Not trying to downplay that I made you cry, but I did apologize to you immediately that night🥺❤️. Well, I know my apology didn't work that well because you were still mad at me when we met at the Rochester airport. You also didn't seem to want to talk to me after we landed, so I left. However, looking back, it was such a missed opportunity. If I had been proactive enough to talk to you and apologize again at the airport, and if you'd been willing to talk, maybe we wouldn't be in this mess right now.

Anni, have you given any thought to how differently life has been treating us since the fall of 2023? I don't know exactly how your life has been going since you don't talk to me, but mine has not been that pretty.

Now, before some people tell me to just get over it or just tough it out, I want to say that I really don't have a problem with you (and I do know there are people who have it worse than me, and I appreciate your patience for an inexperienced and stupid brat like me), but I am writing this diary entry only for Anni.

Anni, I am happy that you are living your dreams. It always makes me happy when you are happy.

Anni, I think you know how hard the entry-level IT job market has been for the past three years, and I was very fortunate to receive three full-time cybersecurity offers. I have lost all of them, and I think my luck has run out.

Anni, do you know what's more potent in making me feel sad and depressed than looking at my career lies ruined? It is looking at it and realizing that I do not see any hope that my life and career will get better.

Hope is a very interesting thing, and you have been my hope. I really appreciate you for supporting me after my cancer surgery last year, but Anni, do you remember that it was the only time you showed up for me in the entirety of 2025? I spent almost the entire year submerged in depression, begging and hoping for you to show up. I know you were aware of my cries for help because people were careless in hiding what they knew, but my calls were left unanswered😞.

Anni, I guess you think you can take your time deciding when to talk to me because everything has been going well from your perspective. Your career is going well, and I have continued to put more and more commitment into our relationship. Everything is pink and rosy.

Anni, I feel like I am suffocating. I feel like there is nothing I can do to improve my situation. If you don't talk to me by the end of this year, and I don't get a job in Philly by then, I will kill myself. I think I will only be able to drag myself that far.

I think this is all I have for today. Anni, I love you❤️🥰🤗😘