

Anni, I feel so blessed to have you with me, especially after a day of work ❤️😁😄😅

Thank you for spending time with me today and yesterday. I am really happy that you did. You have never failed to brighten my day ❤️

I thought about what we should do after you start to talk to me, so we can have a proper date night. To be honest, since you are my first love, I don't really have a good idea what a perfect date night is. Wasn't there a thing called "Netflix and chill?" Is it just like a couple spending the night together watching Netflix and talking? Is it still a thing? I don't know. I was never good with slang terms.

Oh yeah, Anni, you know I want to marry you, and you know I want to marry you no matter what, so I just want to talk to you about my parents real quick.

Let's start with my dad. I think my dad won't be a problem. Recently, my dad basically told me that as long as I can get a good job, he doesn't care about what's going on in my personal life and who I will marry. I think I told you before that my dad used to want me to marry a stereotypical cute Taiwanese girl. That's because my dad, like many Chinese men in his generation, liked Lin Chi-ling when he was young. You can Google her real quick, but basically she is what Chinese people of his generation think about when talking about a stereotypical cute Taiwanese girl, and my dad wanted his granddaughters to be mini Lin Chi-ling since he thought it would be very cute. My sister told me it created a pretty funny scenario when my parents first learned about you through RIT after I went into the ER for the second time three years ago: that my dad was seemingly more concerned about the fact that you are Irish, not Taiwanese, than the fact that I went into the ER. However, it seems like my dad has finally come to terms with the fact that his future daughter-in-law will not be the stereotypical cute Taiwanese girl as he thought. Well, since I consistently get overdosed by how cute you are, I guess you can argue that the affection for a cute girl is still running through the family 😊. Now, my dad will probably, well, most definitely, give me a lot of shit for being too much of a simp, but my mom used to say that if I turn out to be a hopeless romantic, then I got it from my dad since that's how he is, so my dad really has no one to blame but himself 😊.

Moving on to my mom. My mom also thinks you are cute. When my family was on the cruise ship at the end of last year, my mom and my sister looked at a girl and said she looked like my type. I asked why, and they said it was because she looked like a doll, and based on you, she would be my type. So yeah, my mom and my sister think you look like a doll 🧸. However, my mom told me she will still consider how her future daughter-in-law and I will treat each other in the decades to come. However, I still think we will be fine, because a few months after my mom learned about you and what happened at RIT, my mom said, "If you fall in love with someone, then you just fall in love with someone. There's nothing you can do about it yet." So yeah, I think we will be fine.

Since my right wrist is still not fully healed, I can not do the exercise routine I was doing. I am thinking about going back to do Muay Thai this Saturday for the cardio and to see some of the people there since it's been two years since I last went to the Muay Thai gym. People there tried to help me two years ago, and I appreciate it. It will be from 10:00 AM to 11:00 AM Pacific Time on Saturday, and I will skip the sparring session after that since my right wrist is still not fully healed.

The Philly's entry-level IT job market is still very dead, so I think that's all for today's diary entry.

Thank you for being my hope. I hope you will talk to me soon. Anni, I love you ❤️😊😊😊