Hi Anni, thank you for spending time with me today. Baby, I love you❤️🥰🤗😘

My home's refrigerator has been broken for a month now, and the home warranty said they still have not received the replacement part. I think it is pretty funny because I can bet that at least one of their employees has definitely gotten mad because they had to wait for 5 minutes for their coffee at Starbucks when their company is literally moving at a snail's pace.

During one dinner this past month, my parents and I talked about how inconvenient it is to be without a refrigerator, and how we need to be more precise about how much food we cook for dinner so it doesn't go to waste. During this conversation, I realized my mom still doesn't know how much food I typically eat each dinner. It was kind of surprising but also kind of expected since my mom almost never cooks.

During my junior year of high school, my family drove down the California coast to visit universities and learn more about which one my sister and I should apply to. My mom is usually the one ordering food for everyone at a restaurant, and the fact that she does not know how much food I typically eat was not usually a problem. We don't dine out much, so I could just eat more the next day to make it up. However, since it was a long road trip, that wasn't the case.

For the first week, my mom ordered less than half the food I usually ate every day, and I was starving. My dad was talking to my mom, saying I was definitely starving, and suggested she order more. However, my mom was adamant that she ordered enough. Because my mom was so confident in her assessment, I felt it would be really awkward to tell her that I was actually starving. Therefore, I arrived at Santa Barbara as a young lad who had been starved for a week. We found a pretty decent Chinese restaurant there, and my mom let us eat as much as we wanted. I ate a lot, and my mom was in total shock. As I was stuffing my face, I felt someone pat my shoulder. I turned my head, and there stood a Chinese uncle, the owner of the restaurant. It turns out that because I was eating so many dishes and so many bowls of rice, the owner got scared and had to leave the kitchen to see for himself what on earth was going on. He looked at me and said, “小伙子胃口真棒啊(You young lad have such a great appetite),” as he patted my shoulder again. I still consider this one of the greatest achievements of my life🤪.

I will go to the Muay Thai gym again this Wednesday. The session will be from 10:00 A.M. to 11:00 A.M. Pacific Time.

Job hunting for entry-level IT jobs in Philly remains difficult, and the end of this year is getting closer and closer. I can feel the clock ticking.

It's still kind of depressing to think I had three full-time offers, one Cybersecurity Software Engineer offer, and two Cyber Security System Engineer offers. However, as I said, as long as you talk to me, I can live with it because you are my everything, and I want to marry you❤️

I think this is all for today’s diary entry. Talk to me soon, Anni. Baby, I love you❤️🥰🤗😘