

Anni, I miss you so bad ❤️😘😘😘

I want to clear up some concerns you may have right now. I do not care about your political leanings. I love you. I only care about whether you are willing to support me when I need you or not.

My right wrist has not been feeling right for a month now, and it has gotten worse since it got twisted last Saturday. Currently, I am working with a basically broken right hand, and unfortunately, I am right-handed. It is getting better, though, just slowly.

Working at Starbucks has continued to be a bad experience. One reason is that Starbucks has made a lot of bad decisions since I started and told us we aren't allowed to explain them to customers. Essentially, Starbucks is treating us as cannon fodder to cover up its own bad decisions, so customers get mad at Baristas while they make their quarterly reports look better to boost stock prices. Just today, a customer got mad at us for the wait time, but realistically there's nothing we can do because we have to follow Starbucks' policy.

I guess one thing I can share is that many customers only get mad and rant at short female baristas working at my place, and they never do it to male baristas, especially male baristas with tall stature. I wonder why. Do you know what's funny? Just a few months ago, a customer was literally shit-talking about one of the female baristas right in front of her face while she was making drinks, but he immediately stopped shit-talking once I started to stare him down. This is why I do not understand why the majority of the female population of the U.S. seems to be so anti-gun. My opinion is that if you are in any sort of minority or disadvantaged group, then you need to have a gun. I do not think people will be this careless about shit-talking female baristas if California and Starbucks allow baristas to open-carry. But hey, it's just my opinion.

Philly's entry-level IT job market is dead dead this week. It is truly frustrating because not only do I want to get a job in Philly so I can live with you, but I also don't want to work at Starbucks anymore. Do you remember the remote contract gig I told you I was doing at Integreon in August this year? The project got extended. They told me I can work on it during my free time. Back in August, they required me to work at least 32 hours a week on the project, but now they have dropped this requirement, and I have been doing it when I can throw some free time together. I am evaluating the option of quitting Starbucks and doing the remote contract gig full-time. I mean, your relatives don't seem to like me anyway, and they perhaps will be happier if I don't work at Starbucks anymore. There are, of course, several downsides for me. For starters, Starbucks has a global operational presence, and it will somewhat help me network on LinkedIn when I am trying to find a job. Another concern is how long the contract project will last. However, if you don't talk to me by the end of the year and I don't get a job in Philly by then, I will just merk myself, so it might be less of a concern.

I think that's all for today. Anni, I love you ❤️😘😄😂