

I was off work early today! I miss you so badly

Since I don't have a job offer right now, and I need one so I can afford to live in Philly with you, job hunting is definitely one of my top priorities right now. Of course, it is still behind you. You are, and will always be, my most important priority

People have suggested I go to conferences like Bsidess to network my way into a job, but yeah, I don't really want to do that until you talk to me. Imagine when I am at a conference, talking to another person like, "Oh hey, how are you? I really want to get a job. Would you mind networking with me?" Then a RITSEC person, or another person you told about us, just bumps into me. This possibility is just way too awkward for me. So yeah, I think I am going to hold off on in-person networking until you talk to me so it won't be this awkward.

Finding a job in Philly continues to be hard. I am applying to all kinds of IT jobs: help desk, junior system administrator, junior cloud engineer, junior security analyst, junior security engineer, junior system engineer, etc. However, I still haven't had a breakthrough. I am still doing the cold LinkedIn connection-message thing, but the end result is still lacking. It would be helpful to ask someone in the industry for tips on what I should do to get a job, but again, I will need to delay in-person networking until you talk to me.

I think this is all for today's diary entry. I love you 